Parent Support Partner Skills and Guiding Principles:

PSP is a unique service for parents and/or caregivers of children involved in the Community Mental Health system. One of the unique roles of PSPs is that they can support parents and families in learning essential skills and abilities that will lead to more successful outcomes for children and youth. PSPs can help educate parents on how to build productive partnerships and communication between themselves and child-serving systems such as educations, juvenile justice, and the public mental health system. By providing education regarding access to services, the assessment process, family driven-youth guided practice, and person-centered planning process, parent and caregivers are able to speak for themselves and make informed choices. When a family is skilled in navigating and understanding the needs of their child as well as understanding the perspective, mandates and agendas of service providers, the likelihood of successful treatment greatly improves.

Knowledge and Skills

1. Ethics and Confidentiality
2. Alliance Building and Empowering Families
3. Bridging and Collaboration
4. Developing Direction and Determination

PSPs are helping professionals and like other professionals (i.e., social workers, psychologists, educators, medical doctors) should adhere to a code of ethics. Listed below are three ethical principles for PSPs that align with FAFC's Guiding Principles.

PSP Ethical Principles

1. Integrity
2. Safety
3. Professional Responsibility

PSP should work to create an environment where questions are valued - and independence and change are essential.
